History of the Colorado Agricultural College

The Colorado Agricultural College represents half a century development of an ideal for the education of industrial classes and the working out of a dream of the pioneers who believed that agriculture and industry would play an increasing part in the development of our state.

The College was established in 1879 and has kept pace with the growing importance of education and the great industries it represents. The first appropriation was made in 1872 for the buildings and improvements of the grounds.

The college was made one of the state institutions by the constitutional provisions in 1876. The State Board of Agriculture was established in 1879. The Board of Trustees was discontinued and the Board of Agriculture assigned its duties. The Institution was then ready to begin its great work in the educational world, ten years after the establishment of the Territorial Assembly and one year after the General Assembly accepted the provisions of the Morrill Act of 1890 making the College a member of the great National Land Grant System.

Its modest beginning gave little promise of its present work in the educational field, but from the first it has been a pioneer in vocational education.

It is difficult now to realize the tremendous problems that confronted the faculty and Board of Agriculture in the early days.

The College had to do pioneering work in every line of instruction now offered. It developed the first course in mechanical engineering in Colorado and was the first institution in the nation to establish a course in irrigation engineering. Through its engineering courses it laid the foundations for the strength of its courses on other lines. It was the first state institution to establish a department of home economics, and is the only state institution offering technical courses in varied phases of agriculture characteristic of Colorado, in forestry and in veterinary medicine.

The Hatch Act established an experiment station which was accepted in 1889, gave it its first opportunity for carrying on research and investigational work. Since then this work has been developed rapidly.

Buildings came slowly and were always needed badly when they came.

The work of the experiment was extended in 1905 by the acceptance of the Adams Act. In 1906 the campus was extended by three hundred and twenty acres more, also one hundred and sixty acres were added to the experiment farm.

The need of extension work was recognized by our national government by the passage of the Smith Act, which was accepted by our own General Assembly in 1915. Since then our extension department has done some wonderful work.

In 1917 the General Assembly recognized the need of buildings at the several state institutions and provided for a ten year levy to be used for building purposes. The results are new buildings which may be seen on our campus today.

Thriughout its developement the institution was held stead fast-ly to the work assigned to it by the several national acts and to the state acts established in the institution and in the training of its students has emphasized the importance of high ideals, of character, of citizenship, high standards of technical proficiency and of public service. From the beginning the institution has been fortunate in being able to call into its service and hold in its employ, men and woman who are leaders in their specialties.

The college stands today one of the leading institutions of its kind in the inter-mountain region, well organized, well equipped, with an excellent personnel of instructors, and subatantially financed, strong in its work and recognized in leadership; a service institution dedicated to ideals of democracy, industry, education and community betterment, a builder of character and citizenship.

THE R. O. T. C. BAND.

Few organizations on the C.A.C. Campus are more deservedly popular than is the Aggie Band. Every student rally, every important athletic contest, every ceremony of state, finds the band on hand with its martial strains, to cement more firmly the bonds that bind Aggies together, that fraternal bond known everywhere so well under the name of Aggie spirit. While because of its relation to the military training unit it is organized on the lines of a U.S. Army band, it is nevertheless strictly an Aggie organization and one in which every college man and woman, as well as every townsmen takes a good deal of justifiable pride.

The College Band is an outgrowth of an old-fashioned bugle and drum corps which served with the cadet corps in the early days. Impressed with the inadequacy of this form of music and imbued with the belief that Aggies should and could have a real band, a group of students who were playing in the Fort Collins City Band met in the fall of 1901 and laid plans toward this end. Prof. Charles Jones, who was then a student, was selected to wait upon the faculty and secure their permission for its organization. This permission was granted but with the stipulation that they must be able to demonstrate their ability to perform in public within six weeks. Needless to say, the boys made good and Aggies have had a band ever since.

Practice was first held in the mechanical building, later on in the library. The first leader was Albert Bayliss of Grand Junction, himself a student,—the original membership comprising about a dozen men, among them Prof. Jones who has been a member of the band continuously since its organization and who has for many years served as its business manager.

In 1903 Wm. E. Runge, now a well known music dealer of Fort Collins, became leader which position he filled with credit for some ten years, during which time the membership grew to thirtyeight, and a degree of proficiency was attained which gave the band a high rank as a musical organization. This high standard has been continued since 1917 by its present leader, Dr. Wm. H. Feldman, who is an able conductor, a splendid teacher and who is held in high esteem by his men. Thus in spite of the constantly changing personnel which is inevitable in a college organization, a band has been maintained which has contributed in no small measure to the enjoyment and success of our varied student enterprises.

Besides its other achievements the band has served as a training school for students who have a musical bent, many of its members becoming accomplished musicians. For the past two years the band has also sponsored the College Lyceum course which has enjoyed a revival of interest under its management. During the present year two additional entertainments of high class, a comic opera, Cori Fan Tutte, and a concert by Sousa, have also been staged. Within recent years the band has taken three extensive tours over different sections of the state which have not only been educational and enjoyable to its members but through them the College has been brought into favorable light before thousands of people, especially students in the various high schools, many of whom have since become or will yet become enthusiastic Aggies.

COLORADO

PROGRAM

APRIL 5 TO APRIL 22

Inclusive

The Reserve Officers Training Corps

By Act of Congress, July 2, 1862, the Federal Land Grant Colleges are required to teach Military Science and Tactics.

The course of training at the Colorado Agricultural College is that prescribed by the War Department for Field Artillery Units of the Senior Division of the Reserve Officers Training Corps, as adapted to institutional conditions.

The first two years, or Basic Course, is required for all men physically fit, and familiarizes the student with the care and uses of the different types of modern field artillery material and qualifies him to properly handle and care for the artillery horse and warfare equipment.

All Juniors and Seniors who elect and are authorized to take the Advanced Course work have the opportunity of qualifying for commissions as Second Lieutenants in the Organized Reserves of our Army. During this course they receive from the Government from $200.00 to $300.00 for the two years.

All students are provided with uniforms by the U. S. Government and at no expense to them.

Benefits from such training are of a dual nature: To the student, through physical training, habits of orderliness, obedience and precision, and from a personal realization of responsibility and knowledge gained in organization and leadership; to the Government through the increased value of the student to his Country in the event of another national emergency.

The R. O. T. C. band is a unit of the above organization.

To the Fraternity of Kappa Kappa Psi:

The R.O.T.C. Band at this institution is an organization which has been on the campus for many years. After R.O.T.C. was organized in place of the former military drill the Band increased in numbers and interest very materially.

At the present time it has a number of faculty people playing various pieces, and a membership of forty. The concerts which the band has given over the state have won for it a very wide reputation. The leader of the Band is a member of the college faculty and its organization and activities are all under faculty control. I believe that the Band is deserving of consideration in looking forward to the granting of more chapters of your fraternity.

Respectfully submitted

Dean of the Faculty.

The Kappa Kappa Psi
National Honorary Band Fraternity

Gentlemen:

It is understood that the Colorado Agricultural College Band Club, Whose members are drawn from the R.O.T.C. Band of this institution, are about to petition you for a chapter of the national honorary band fraternity "Kappa Kappa Psi". Having been informed that eligibility for such membership is based upon scholarship, musical ability and interest, it is believed that the members of this club possess such necessary qualifications. During my period of observation of a year and a half it has seemed that the band has, under the able and unselfish leadership of Dr. Wm. H. Feldman, met with great success, and this mostly through the resourcefulness, ingenuity, ability and intense interest of its own members. Because of this feeling and because of such action, it is felt, will assuredly stir its members to even greater efforts and provide a reward for such effort, it is urgently recommended that the petition of the club be granted.

Respectfully,
